Background

Eden is an insightful, dynamic executive coach who draws on her professional development expertise and business acumen to help individuals, teams and organizations achieve their goals. She is skilled at building highly collaborative relationships with people from diverse backgrounds and cultures.

Eden has partnered with senior executives, emerging leaders and entrepreneurs from a wide variety of fields and companies including A&E Networks, BuzzFeed, CarePoint Health, Columbia University, Diageo, Eyeview, Food Network, Khan Academy, Loews Hotels, Reddit, RRE Ventures, The New York Public Library and TruTV.

She enjoys mentoring up-and-coming talent as a coach and guest lecturer at New York University's Stern School of Business and is an instructional consultant for adjunct professors in the Stern Teaching Effectiveness Program. She also facilitates monthly peer learning circles for leaders from high growth, VC-backed technology companies.

Eden is passionate about advancing her clients' personal and organizational change agendas. By providing the right combination of challenge and support, Eden helps them develop greater self-awareness, gain a more accurate understanding of how they are perceived by others, and experiment with new behaviors that, over time, result in tangible improvements in their capacity to lead, influence and innovate.

Before founding Clear Path in 2008, Eden advised executive teams in both public and privately-held companies on strategies to advance their business objectives in complex situations such as M&A transactions, financial crises, litigation and management transitions.

Select client results

- Coached the entire executive team of a high-growth tech company over a critical 18-month period as it scaled from 30 to 95 employees, made a key pivot in its business model, opened a second satellite office and implemented the necessary infrastructure and process improvements to support its continued expansion. We focused on fostering individual leadership growth and skill development as well as maintaining healthy team dynamics and a vibrant organizational culture.
- Helped the COO of a rapidly-scaling artist management agency pull himself out of the weeds to spend more time on planning, strategy and management of the agency's highest-priority initiatives. He also made significant strides in becoming a more accessible, engaged leader, achieving a healthier, more sustainable work schedule, and expanding his visibility and involvement with the agency's new parent company. One year later, he was promoted to CIO of the combined company.
